Homebirth is a pre-planned delivery with certain terms and conditions, assisted by a specially competent midwife which is carried out at home. Homebirth is still experiencing pros and cons in the world, especially in the field of maternal and infant health. However, the selection of homebirth is still in great demand by women from various countries in the world, especially countries that facilitate this homebirth. This study aims to explore homebirth in various countries in the world.

This type of research is a narrative literature review. This research was conducted from October 2021 to June 2022. The search for articles was accessed through the Pubmed, Science Direct, and Google Scholar databases. Articles were selected based on inclusion and exclusion criteria.

Search for articles contained in scientific journals is done through the PubMed database, Science Direct, and Google Scholar. Then the selection was made using the specified inclusion and exclusion criteria and duplicate journals so that 23 articles relevant to the topic were obtained and an analysis was carried out.

There are reasons, criteria for women, regulations, criteria for health workers, benefits, risks, and the role of midwives in homebirth deliveries.

Keyword : homebirth, midwife, physiological delivery
