ABSTRACT

A Model of Leadership in regional Hospitals in West Sumatera Based on Minangkabau Culture

Rima Semiarty

The new public health paradigm implemented program based on science, evidence approach, and management-leadership system to provide individual and health community. Hospital leadership need to considered local culture in order achieve hospital aim and function (reeleeder et al., 2006). In the preliminary research showed that there was a gap in communication between leader and employees related to awareness for Minangkabau local culture.

The aim of this research is to develop a model of leadership that combines modern principles with those in the Minangkabau culture, specifically in West Sumatera hospitals. Preliminary findings included the existence of issues related to aspects of communications between the leadership and the employees that do not conform to Minangkabau cultural norms.

The study took a qualitative approach involving in-depth interviews with hospital directors and the managers directly below them as well as experts on culture to test the internal validity of the concepts used in identifying attributes of leadership that were characteristic of hospitals directors in West Sumatra. Thematic analysis was carried out and case studies developed, including triangulation of data obtained from stakeholders.

The findings of this study showed a model of leadership in regional hospitals in West Sumatera based on Minangkabau culture with the characteristic: coordination and supervision between leader and the employees conducted in accordance with the value of proverb in Minangkabau culture like ditinggikan sarantiang dan didahulukan salangka [(a leader) should be one twig higher, one step ahead]. On facing external was comply with existing regulation memahami anggo jo tanggo, memakai raso jo pareso [understand thoughts and considerations, use feelings and intuition], adapting with the situasion kama kelok lilin, kasinan kelok loyang loyang [where the wax flows, so goes the brass]. Internal issues had to be faced using empathy as in lamak dek awak katuju dek urang [what tastes good to us is pleasing to others]. This study showed that hospital leadership that more closely conforms to Minangkabau cultural norms is associated with better outcomes as measured by the standards used by the Ministry of Health as well as the targets established by local governments. For this reason, these findings suggest that hospital directors must know and understand local culture (in this case, Minangkabau culture). For this reason, it is suggested that people appointed to leadership positions in West Sumatera hospitals have an understanding of local culture and recognize the role it may play their relationships with their employees.
