

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

After analyzing A Game of Thrones, the writer discovers several findings that is answered the research questions of this research. First, the writer found that Martin as the author of this novel tries to represent a complicated story through characterization and also plot. The writer believes that the complicated characterization can be seen from how each character going through a sudden change in their situation that forced them to changes their behavior and actions. Meanwhile the writer believes the plot is complicated is seen from the way Martin shows many events that occur to each character that related and influenced their journey toward their desired goals.

Second, the writer found four types of desire in this novel. First is the desire to find and punish the murderer. This desired is pictured in the Eddard and Catelyn's journey. With the same desire, they experienced a different journey and later get differerent result. Second is the desire to reveal the Queen secret that is pictured in Eddard's journey. This desire has another purpose which is Eddard tries to get rid the Queen from his family. Third desire is to get acceptance by people that is pictured in Jon Snow's story. The writer argues that he tries to find another place and people that makes him feels like home unlike in Winterfell where he got nothing because of his status. The last desire is Daenerys' desire to come back home. It sounds simple, but the journey that is experienced by Daenerys' is very complicated that forced her to change her desire. The writer believe that this act of her is caused by the pressure that happened to her and also because of the experiences that she got while being the wife of a Khalasar's leader makes her gain confidence and also anger that lead her to change the desire.

Third, the writer believes that the efforts that is done by the characters in order to achieve their desired goals is urge by two factors. The first factor is, the writer believes that the amount of the efforts that they done is equal to the amount of the desire that they have. and the writer believes that in all desire that the writer analyzed, all of them have a very big desire that lead them to take a very bold decision in their life. Second factor that the writer believes urge them to do the efforts in order to achieve their goal is the person who get the advantages if the desire is achieved. In all desire that the writer analyzed, all of the result is advantages to the person who done the journey itself. The writer conclude that beside the amount of the desire, the person who got the advantage after the journey is the factors that make it possible for one character to make a bold decision in their journey.
