

CHAPTER IV

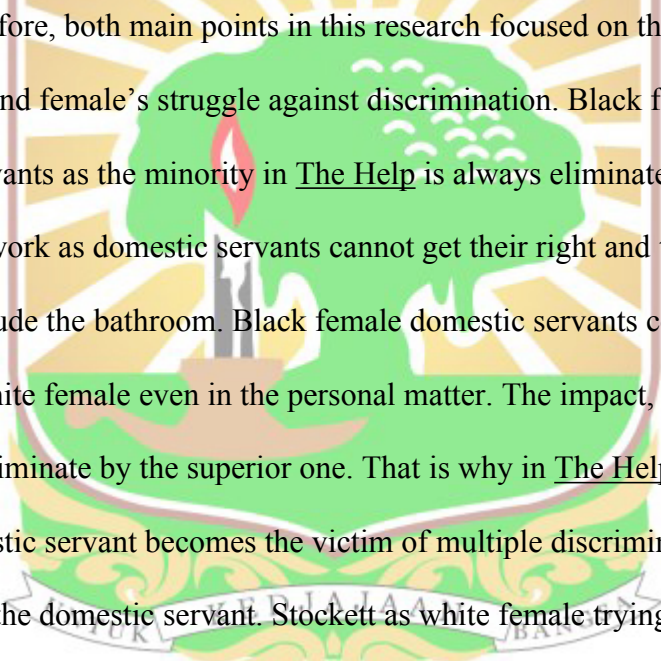

CONCLUSION

This research sees black female's struggle to voice their suffering on discrimination action in the novel The Help by Kathryn Stockett. Stockett gives priority to female existence as a source of power in The Help. There are two main points writer has asserted in this research. They are: Black female domestic servants experiences reflected in The Help and the struggle of two black female narrators of The Help against discrimination to voice their hope on equity.

The first result of this research is the experience of black female domestic servants occurs due to white's stereotypes. This research found two white's stereotypes; white assuming that black is carrying disease and black as criminal. Therefore, white female initiates bathroom for black female domestic servants to prevent them from black diseases. Black is also targeted as thieves due to the color of their skin even when they have not committed any crime. White abuses the stereotype about "black is criminal" to their own private matter beyond the racial problem.

The second result of this research is those black female characters represent the female's struggle to voice their right against discrimination to gain equity. In this case, the writer finds the struggle to fight against discrimination are divided into two methods: storytelling and writing experiences because it is the most effective way to voice the story for black, considering their position in the town is only as black female domestic servant. Thus, here the writer summed up that Stockett's decision is taking black female as the main characters relate to Stockett's nanny who is black female working for her white family. The writer finds that Stockett shared to the readers in her novel that even between woman – woman, discrimination is still alive because of different class and race.

Therefore, both main points in this research focused on the female's experiences and female's struggle against discrimination. Black female as domestic servants as the minority in The Help is always eliminated. Black female who work as domestic servants cannot get their right and the proper facilities include the bathroom. Black female domestic servants controlled and limited by white female even in the personal matter. The impact, the minority become discriminate by the superior one. That is why in The Help, black female domestic servant becomes the victim of multiple discrimination, as black and as the domestic servant. Stockett as white female trying her best to shows the voiced of black female domestic servants. In conclusion, through The Help Stockett expresses her idea to support black female to voice and reject the actions that unfairly discriminate and restrict their rights.
