

CHAPTER 4

CONCLUSION

This research is about impoliteness strategies applied by detractors of Donald Trump in their online comments on Twitter. The writer uses impoliteness strategies that are proposed by Culpeper (1996, p.350) and Leech's theory (1983, p.13) context is used to get understand about the user's comments. After conducting the research, the result shows that there are four impoliteness strategies are used. The dominant strategy is negative impoliteness. Negative impoliteness becomes the most dominant strategy because of the users tend to give scorn or ridicule to Trump. Then it is followed by bald on record, positive impoliteness, and sarcasm or mock politeness. One of the strategy, withhold politeness cannot be found in this research. In this case withhold politeness does not exist because the followers want to stress their disbelief in Trump's government by using scorn or ridicule utterances rather than being silent. Also, the strategies can occur together in one comment, so it is complex impoliteness.

For future studies, there are many object of impoliteness studies in online interaction need to be research. Yet, this may be better for other researchers to communicate with the participants to identify their reasons to be impolite and this could also help us knowing the factors that triggering impoliteness. In freedom of speech era like nowadays, it is good for people are using their social rights to criticize something or to say something. Lest, this great chance are use to create chaos situation in virtual life and can be impacting to real life. This study is hoped to enrich information to anybody who interested in learning it and to do deeper analysis.
