

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION & SUGGESTION

4.1 Conclusion

After analyzing the data of animal proverbs from the English and Indonesian language, the writer found that there are only a few amounts of animal proverbs from both languages with the same animal imagery and the same meaning. There are also several proverbs with different animal imagery from each language with the same meaning. Lastly, there are big portions of data that are not connected by animal imagery and are only related by the closeness of the proverb's meaning.

Cultural values from each data are drawn from the meaning of the proverbs themselves. While the expression used in proverbs from English and Indonesian are mostly different and the way proverbs presents the idea of its values, the values it implied are generally same.

Each value is implied by the nature of the animal, its trait, and its environment. The elements stated above represent human cultural values in society. These values generally are advice on better options or take at life, warning of danger, or general wisdom of the folks.

4.2 Suggestion

After this research is conducted, the writer suggests future researchers that is interested in proverbs focus on the usage of proverbs in conversation to capture the entirety of proverbs usage in the context of daily life. The writer also suggests future researchers who use similar ideas to gather data on more specific clauses. The writer hopes that future researchers will be able to explore proverbs more.
