Adolescents strive to appear attractive when presenting themselves on social media. Their efforts to achieve this include using filters, posting edited photos, only sharing favorable images, and even sharing only positive information. The behavior is related to online self-presentation because it aims to manage the impressions others have of themself. The purpose of this research was to determine the description of online self-presentation of adolescents TikTok users. This research used a descriptive quantitative method. The sampling technique used was purposive sampling with a sample of 250 adolescents aged 13 – 15 years who had TikTok post in Padang City. Online self-presentation was measured using the Self Presentation on Facebook Questionnaire (SPFBQ), which has been adapted into indonesian and TikTok platform. Additionally, open-ended questions are included to explore the motives behind the online self-presentation of adolescent TikTok users. The results indicate that 123 adolescents (49.2%) presenting their ideal self, 109 adolescents (43.6%) presenting their real self, and 18 adolescents (7.2%) presenting their false self. The motives for adolescents engaging in online self-presentation on TikTok are driven by self-expression, popularity, entertainment, power, affiliation, and social acceptance.
