ABSTRACT

This research aims to analyze the influence of subjective norm and perceived behavioral control on the intention to rent traditional Minang wedding attire with attitude as a mediating variable. The theory used is the Theory of Planned Behaviour, which includes three main factors: subjective norm, perceived behavioural control, and attitude, which influence behavioral intention. This research was conducted on brides-to-be in West Sumatra with a total of 160 respondents. Data were collected using an online questionnaire and analyzed using quantitative methods.

The research results show that subjective norm and perceived behavioural control significantly influence attitude and intention to rent. Additionally, attitude has also been proven to mediate the relationship between subjective norm and perceived behavioral control towards intention to rent. This research provides practical implications for traditional wedding dress service providers to enhance product appeal through promotions that emphasize social norms and ease of access for potential customers.
