ABSTRACT

Raden Mattaher General Hospital Jambi Province is a referral hospital and there are still nurses who show poor caring behavior. This shows the need to improve nurse caring behavior, one of which is by means of comprehensive training. This study aims to identify the effect of comprehensive caring training on the caring behavior of nurses at the Raden Mattaher Regional General Hospital, Jambi Province. This research was conducted on nurses in the Class 3 Inpatient Room. Research time was July 2019 - September 2020. This type of quasi-experimental quantitative research uses a time series research design. The statistical test performed was a statistical test of the mean difference between groups using the GLM Repeated Measures Analysis with the Simple First Model. The population in this study were 165 nurses in the third class inpatient room. The sample consisted of 22 respondents. The results of the study have an effect (P Value 0.000) of comprehensive caring training on the knowledge, attitudes and skills of nurse caring behavior at the Regional General Hospital of Raden Mattaher, Jambi Province. Expected that comprehensive caring training can be carried out for nursing staff, especially for those who have not received training and are always updated with the latest sciences related to caring.
